Ceres Organics promote themselves on the principles of ethical and fair trading and claim BioGro as their 'certifier of choice'.^[1] In reality their unethical employment practises don't comply with the standards required for certification.^[2]

Workers are denied the right to representation, a fair process and equal treatment. For many Ceres workers it is hard to see how Ceres are 'empowering communities' as they claim.^[3]

Ceres workers want the company to comply with the standards they claim as part of their certification. They also deserve job security and a liveable wage.

Demand Ceres support the well-being and fair treatment of workers including freedom of association and the right to a liveable wage.
